Using Paul Tillich as a guide he wants to focus our value systems around our ultimate concerns. These concerns should fit within a secular or religious thought system. He believes that our ultimate concerns should include “A Livable Future”

Religion would force people into action: “Religion is not about doctrine. It is about practice…” and will carry a sense of justice
· Ultimate concerns carry doubt
· Theology invites people to act in the face of doubt
· This motivation will derive from revelation
· Revelation could be secular or religious
  · A walk through the woods
  · In the depths of love
  · In the middle of prayer
· Revelation should never instill certainty but only courage
· Science and Religion have much in common
  · both rely on “reasoned reflection”
  · both under constant reformation
  · doubt is necessary and good for both
